We're making products responsibly.

The key to making t-shirts – or any other type of apparel – in an environmentally and socially responsible way is to have as much control and influence over the process as possible.

Reducing carbon emissions

Hanes has reduced carbon-dioxide emissions by 28% since 2007. Additionally, the company has significantly reduced carbon emissions from the transportation of raw materials and distribution of finished products by more than 50% since 2008.

Renewable energy

A large portion of the energy used to make Hanes apparel is generated by biomass, hydro and geothermal energy sources – and this helps the company avoid emissions.

Water-wise U.S. Cotton

Hanes is committed to water conservation, and has reduced water use by 30% since 2007.

Because cotton is a water-intensive crop, most of our cotton is grown and harvested in the Southeast – where annual rainfall generally exceeds a cotton plant's water requirements.

Creation of environmentally responsible jobs worldwide

Thousands of Hanes employees around the world are committed to and play a significant role in the company's environmental responsibility program. Additionally, the company's employees also take environmentalism to the next level by combining it with community improvement.

Low-waste

Our yarn is produced by using environmentally responsible methods in energy-efficient facilities that produce as little waste as possible.

Hanesbrands products keep the equivalent of nearly 60 million plastic bottles from landfills each year.

Energy Star Partner of the Year – again

We're proud to announce that Hanes has been selected as a U.S. EPA ENERGY STAR Partner of the Year 9 times in a row.
